Resultative complements

Some Chinese verbs consist of two elements, the second indicating the result of the first. On its own, 'zhō' means 'look for' but add the resultative complement 'dǎo', indicating completion, and you get 'zhōdǎo' 'find'.

Qǐng nǐ gāi zhō yī ge huì shuō yīngwén de rén. 'Please find someone who can speak English.'
Nǐ kěnéng zhōbùdǎo. 'You may not find it.'
